WEST, Mrs. Frederic. A Summer Visit to Ireland in 1846. Illustrated with aquatints and woodcuts. London: Bentley, 1847. 8vo. Publisher's cloth. Professional paper restoration to a few margins where there were faint traces of old worming. Good copy. Rare. Teresa Cornwallis West was interested in the ordinary people, landscape, antiquities, folklore, agriculture, politics, the effects of the famine on the poor and the relief work. The author states that the purpose of her visit to Ireland during the Irish famine was "The public sympathies are at last awakened towards Ireland. My object in travelling through it was to satisfy myself of its actual condition ... and to exhort my English countrymen to go and do likewise". During her three week visit, partly conducted by rail, she visits Wicklow, Carlow, Kilkenny, Tipperary, Cork, and Limerick, returning via Offaly and Kildare: "I was glad to leave behind the poverty and sharp-facedness of Tipperary, and enter County Cork. However, the scenery was bleak enough passing the Kilworth Hills. Fermoy, on the Blackwater, is the nicest and cleanest town in the country" She shows a favourable disposition towards the native Irish, gives a detailed description of the national schools, comments freely on hotels and quotes extensively from Duffy's 'Ballad Poetry of Ireland', also with references to Bartlett, Hall, Petrie and Moore. At Bray she notices potatoes "beginning to fail." She travelled with her husband and they stayed at Shanganagh Castle, the seat of Sir George Cockburn and at Lough Fea the seat of John Shirley. "Ardee is a neat town. We stopped and changed horses at the Shirley Arms, near the tower of an old castle which projects into the street. When Edward Bruce landed in Antrim, in the spring of 1315, with his Scottish followers, they savagely burned the Church of the Carmelite Friary here, filled with women and children, who had taken refuge within its walls."

Hay, Edward. History of the Insurrection of the County of Wexford, A.D. 1798, including an Account of Transactions Preceding that Event, with an Appendix. Dublin: Printed for the Author, by John Stockdale, 1803. 8vo. Full tree calf gilt, title in gilt on black morocco letterpiece on restored spine. Folding chart. Wanting map. V.g. Edward Hay (1761-1826) was the author of this book on the Irish Rebellion of 1798, and a witness to many of the events of that time. He was born, about 1761, at Ballinkee (near Crossabeg), County Wexford, into a Catholic family. His family were large landowners and were long-established in the county. Hay was educated in France and Germany. His father was Harvey Hay. Ballinkee house and estate was sold in 1825 to the Maher family, who shortly afterwards replaced the old Hay home with a new house. Hay was witness to many of the events in Wexford town during the Rebellion. His brother, John, was a prominent Rebel leader, and was executed near the end of the Rebellion on Wexford bridge, 26 June 1798. Another brother, Philip, was a member of the British Army, and was buried in England. Edward Hay was tried for involvement in the Rebellion, but was acquitted. It is clear from Hay's own account and from Miles Byrne's 'Memoirs' that Hay himself had little involvement in the actual fighting, but his actual role in organizing and promoting the Rebellion is far less certain. Hay's book was first published in 1803 and was one of the first accounts of the Rebellion. It was reprinted many times, most of these reprints omit Hay's 1803 Introduction and Appendix, as well as his large fold-out map of the County Wexford. Hay lived in Dublin in later years and was a prominent member of the Catholic Committee and a very active member of the Catholic Association. He was Secretary of the Catholic Association, 1806 - 1819. Edward Hay died at Dublin, 13 October 1826, and is buried in St. James' graveyard, Kilmainham, Dublin, where his headstone can still be seen. The appendix contains the speech of Edward Sweetman, Captain of a late independent company, at a meeting of the freeholders of the County of Wexford. Together with: Authentic Detail of the extravagant and inconsistent conduct of Sir Richard Musgrave, Baronet; with a full refutation of his slander against Edward Hay. Together with: Extract from the account of the population of Ireland [County Wexford] as taken in the year 1788, by G.P. Bushe. With folding sheet 'Analysis of a statistical account of a parish' as proposed by the Royal Irish Academy.

Small folio. Black cloth, image by Le Brocquy in white on upper cover, title in white on spine. Library Edition with [all] the illustrations of the first edition, in association with the University of Pennsylvania Press. Fine copy in fine illustrated dust jacket with design by Le Brocquy. The original limited edition of 1,750 copies published in 1969 sold out within months, and had become very rare and expensive. A reduced octavo edition with only 30 of the original 130 illustrations was published in 1970, and has been many times reprinted; but the full magnificent suite of illustrations was unavailable until this Library Edition was issued in 1985. It is itself a scarce book, as the bulk of the edition was distributed to libraries worldwide, and it has not been reprinted.

REYNOLDS, Horace. A Providence Episode in the Irish Literary Renaissance. Providence: The Study Hill Club, 1929. First edition. 8vo. Quarter black linen on green marbled boards, title in gilt on spine. Edition limited to 300 copies (Number One). Top edge cut, others deckled. Fine copy. When the author met the poet, W.B. Yeats, the first thing Yeats enquired about was: "Is a paper I used to write for years ago called the Providence Journal still in existence?". This sparked Reynolds's interest in its editor, Alfred Williams and he resolved to explore the Journal and the link between Providence and Dublin. Alfred Williams spent three months in Ireland reporting on the Fenians for the New York Herald. That period of his life stirred in him what was to be a life-long interest in Ireland, her people, history and literature. This work contains several references to W. B. Yeats, George Moore, Katharine Tynan, Douglas Hyde, and all those involved in the Irish Literary Renaissance

TRENCH, W. Steuart. Realities of Irish Life. With illustrations by the author's son, J. Townsend Trench. With large coloured, folding map of Ireland, 'Topographical and Historical', canvas-backed. London: Longmans, Green, and Co., 1869. 8vo. Second edition. Publisher's gilt decorated cloth. V.g. Rare with map. The author was Land Agent in Ireland to the Marquis of Lansdowne, Marquis of Bath and Lord Digby during the Famine, and he gives us an on-the-spot account of the 'Big House' in counties Monaghan and Kerry. "Trench is a sharp observer of the social scene - and though through his mid-nineteenth-century eyes he was unable to see the rights of the common man - he had some good ideas. He saw the subdivision of already small holdings was disastrous. A five-acre farmer left his patch in equal divisions between his sons ... Ireland was an important place in the mid-nineteenth century. The people - even the landlords and their agents - believed their little spot of earth was the centre of the world". Patrick Kavanagh.

Lot 489

Gogarty, Oliver St. John. Wild Apples. Dublin: Cuala Press, 1928. First edition. pp. 33. Original linen over grey-blue mottled boards, title on frayed printed label on spine and printed in black on upper cover. Trace of old inoffensive stain on lower board bottom left, corners a little bumped. Edition limited to 50 copies only. Exceptional presentation inscription on front free endpaper: "To the Honble Mrs. Phillimore / from Oliver St. J. Gogarty / Dublin 24.5.28". Also neat pencil marginal notation in French under "Syracuse" poem by Gogarty. A newspaper or magazine clipping of Gogarty's poem, 'The Plum Tree by the House', has been pasted on to one of the rear endpapers. Fine copy in holland-backed boards in an edition limited to 50 only. Oliver Joseph St. John Gogarty (1878-1957), surgeon, wit, and writer was born in Rutland Square (Parnell Square), Dublin, in 1878 and educated at Clongowes Wood and TCD. He graduated in medicine in 1907. He was a close friend of James Joyce and was the inspiration and model for James Joyce's character Buck Mulligan in 'Ulysses' who features in the novel's famous first line "Stately, plump Buck Mulligan came from the stairhead, bearing a bowl of lather on which a mirror and a razor lay crossed." Gogarty twice won the Vice-Chancellor's Prize for English verse and went to Oxford for two terms in a vain attempt to emulate Oscar Wilde by winning the Newdigate Prize. His enthusiasm for the classics won him the favour of the Trinity dons Mahaffy and Tyrrell. He quickly built up a large practice as a nose and throat surgeon. His reputation for irreverent wit was established at sessions in the Bailey restaurant in Duke Street, where he forgathered with Griffith, Seumas O'Sullivan, Sir William Orpen, and James Montgomery. In the Civil War his sympathy with the Free State side led to his capture by Republicans. He escaped by swimming the Liffey, and presented two swans to the river in gratitude. He was nominated to the first Seanad, organised the Tailteann Games, and won a gold medal for his book of verse 'An Offering of Swans' (1924). His house at Renvyle in Connemara was burned down in the Civil War but he rebuilt it as a hotel, run on rather eccentric lines, where he invited his friends, who now included Augustus John and W.B. Yeats. He developed an obsessive hatred of De Valera and an increasing dislike for the conservative Ireland of the thirties, ill-suited to his flamboyant personality. In 1937 he lost a libel action arising from his reminiscences 'As I Was Going down Sackville Street', and moved to London and then to America in 1939. There he continued to write, publishing some further volumes of reminiscences, several novels, and his 'Collected Poems' (1951). He died in New York. This copy is inscribed by Oliver Gogarty to Mrs. Lucy Phillimore (nee Fitzpatrick). Phillimore was a wealthy novelist who leased the famous house and gardens of Kilmacurragh in Wicklow in the 1920s. W B Yeats and Phillimore famously rowed during his visit there, [McCormack: 'Blood Kindred'] Kilmacurragh was known for its gardens and arboretum and has more recently become the National Botanic Gardens of Ireland. A collection of poetry in an edition limited to fifty copies only, printed at the Cuala Press specially for the author. W.B. Yeats requested a revised and extended version for the second edition of the book [see item following], with a preface by him. From the colophon : "Fifty copies of this book have been printed by Elizabeth Corbet Yeats on paper made in Ireland, at the Cuala Press, 133 Lower Baggot Street, Dublin, Ireland. Finished in Holy Week nineteen hundred and twenty eight." Elizabeth Corbet Yeats (1868-1940) worked as an art teacher in London before later establishing the Cuala Press with her brother W.B. Yeats in 1908. Along with her sister Lily, long over-shadowed by their more famous brothers, made a significant contribution to the cultural life of Ireland through their involvement with 'Cuala'. Elizabeth ran the printing department with her brother William as editor to the Press, while Lily ran the embroidery department. It was an Arts & Crafts press run and staffed by women that focussed on publishing new works by Irish authors and played a vital part in the Celtic Revival

Constance Markievicz (1868 - 1927) Her personal copy of John Inglesant; A Romance; Inscription on front pastedown - Constance Gore Booth from her mother Feb 4/87 / Better late than never / May 30 - .st. A nineteenth birthday present to Constance Gore-Booth, later Countess Markievicz, a key Easter Rising, revolutionist, suffragette and the first woman elected to the British Parliament. An important presentation copy of a Victorian romance that goes on to resemble the first owners own life. The eponymous hero is an Anglican, despite being educated partly by Jesuits, and remains so, largely on the advice of his Jesuit mentor, despite strong temptations to convert to Roman Catholicism. Even so, he finds himself involved in intrigues between the Roman Catholic Church and the High Church party of the Church of England, and becomes a courtier of Charles I. He fights on the Royalist side in the English Civil War, is wounded at the battle of Edgehill, and fights at Naseby. As a result of his role in negotiations on the King's behalf in Ireland, he is tried and condemned for treason; he only narrowly escapes execution.

Abbey Leix House School. Rules. Opened January 1844. Broadsheet (52 x 44cms). Printed in red and black within a triple ruled border, four vignettes at corners. London, Levey, Robson & Franklyn, Printers. [circa 1870] Mounted and mylar protected. Fine. Rare. No copy on Copac or in National Library. The original school building was constructed under the guidance of Lady Emma de Vesey, and was completed in 1885, its purpose being to provide education for the boys and girls of the town and surrounds. It replaced a small overcrowded school at Stucker Hill on the main street. The first rule of Abbey Leix House School states: 'Parents who wish their Children to Lady Emma Vesey, or to the Mistress of the School, on Saturdays, at half-past Twelve precisely, and bring a paper, with the name and age of the Child, their own employment and place of residence; besides which, a written recommendation from the Clergyman of the Parish.' Emma Vesey (Herbert), Viscountess de Vescei of Abbey Leix (1819-1884) was the youngest daughter of George Herbert, 11th Earl of Pembroke, a Member of Parliament for the Queen's County. In 1857 he was elected an Irish Representative Peer and entered the House of Lords. Lady Emma founded the Abbeyleix Baby Linen Society, a co-operative enabling women access to affordable baby clothing and the Abbey Leix House School.
